

Assistant Head of School for Academics and Inclusive Excellence

The Agnes Irwin School, a premier educational community for girls in Pre-Kindergarten through grade 12, seeks a dynamic, innovative leader to serve as Assistant Head of School for Academics and Inclusive Excellence. Reporting to and partnering with the Head of School, the Assistant Head will lead efforts prioritized in a community-developed strategic plan: igniting curiosity and creativity within AIS students, energizing and empowering faculty, and enriching the AIS community by demonstrating a commitment to inclusive excellence.

The Assistant Head of School for Academics and Inclusive Excellence will help lead The Agnes Irwin School forward by supporting curriculum development and co-curricular programming in partnership with faculty across divisions; promoting equity and inclusive excellence as guiding principles in the curriculum and campus culture; advancing the professional development programs created by the school's Innovation Team; and overseeing the Center for the Advancement of Girls, which is devoted to creating research-based programming and partnerships to ensure AIS continues to be at the forefront of what is best for girls.

Since the school's founding in 1869, The Agnes Irwin School has dedicated itself to providing an exceptional and empowering education for girls. Rooted in academic excellence, scholarship, community, and collaboration, AIS consistently tailors its programs to the distinctive and individual needs of girls, always holding fast to the principle that a girl's educational journey from childhood through graduation should be joyful, challenging, creative, and inspirational. Located on a beautiful campus in Philadelphia's Main Line suburbs, AIS students and faculty benefit from access to the comprehensive cultural, educational, environmental, and industry resources that the Philadelphia area provides.
